Becoming An Outdoors Woman camp

Becoming An Outdoors Woman camps each April lure ladies from a young Glendale Marine Corp veteran to Mesa's Karan Parsley, a grandma who still logs 50 hours a week as a district manager for General Motors and who looks forward to a weekend of fishing, camping, photography and dozens of other activities alongside other women, taught by a mostly female cadre of volunteer instructors.

"Three times a year I get away from it all and attend BOW, where I let all the stress and noise of my life recede into the background and enjoy the things and the people that interest just me," said Parsley. How great is it to meet like-minded women, new friends who like to learn new things, or revisit outdoor activities that we don't often get living in the city?"

The weekend fee of $245 is a real bargain! It covers two nights' accommodations, seven meals, and they feed us well, professional instructors, all the equipment you'd need, and a group photo. If you broke it down, it's only $122.50 per day. You'd have a hard time finding a weekend get-away for that price, especially with the expert instruction and good food. There's evening entertainment, fun, games, wine tasting and a raffle.
